reveals gothic femininity and subdued eroticism. Intricate lace and velvet combine with hints of old-world Russian opulence marked with paisley, prints and fur accents; while drapes, folds, ribbons and ruffled effects evoke both calm and tumultuous emotions. Blacks and grays are accompanied by midnight blues, wines, blood red and muted purples.

Eyewear Essentials:
Enhance the drama of this look with frames that evoke a sense of mystery. Dark, matte-finished metal eyeglasses and oversized sunglasses will intrigue, while deep colors, subtle jewels and detailed temples will create a rich and sensuous vibe. Shapes can range from delicate to dramatic, as it is the details that make the difference.

resistant. Even the best known topical brands are inconvenient to use, seem to take a long time to penetrate into the skin, and can often lead to discoloration or irritation.

Prominent dermatologists have found that the most effective way to treat acne is with heat, a practice almost as old as time. Today the celebrity jet setters use 'laser', 'light', or the latest, Thermal Pulse Technology, to improve the skin clearing effects of heat. But it all started centuries ago when people would travel to volcanic sulfur springs and submerge their bodies in the hot water to cure their acne. People don't do that anymore, but in Russia, teenagers have been known to place extinguished cigarette butts on their pimples to make them go away. In Argentina, they'll rub a ring until it gets warm then place it on the blemish.

"We have things a lot easier here in the United States," says Luiz Da Silva, inventor of ThermaClear, an FDA-cleared professional grade medical device that's now approved for personal in-home use. "We've been able to take the tried and true anti-bacterial benefit of heat and improve its effect and application using highly advanced pulse technology similar to laser. The result - faster, clearer skin at the touch of a button. It's truly amazing."

In an FDA-reviewed clinical study, ThermaClear was proven to treat pimples quickly, safely and effectively, clearing pimples in as little as 24 hours. Available without a prescription for home use, ThermaClear gives a fast, easy and affordable professional grade treatment for pimples and breakouts. The device can be used over and over again without any monthly tip replacement.
